Music in Education is a practice-based programme that offers plenty of opportunities to develop your musical, (special) education and teaching skills. The programme uses a wide variety of teaching methods, including project education, individual instrumental/vocal lessons, teacher training and e-learning.

The first two years are mainly dedicated to the development of broad knowledge and skills: educational activities, projects and teacher training. Part of the curriculum has a so-called 10-week structure. The activities within this structure are partly thematic. Each period concludes with a project week. Your professional attitude and development are guided and evaluated. In addition to the thematic approach, there is also a linear method: a learning pathway. This mainly applies to instrumental/vocal education and music theory.

Specialisation starts in your third year. You can choose either Music in Arts Education or Special Music Education. These specialisations will allow you to gain additional competence in your future profession. You can create your own individual profile by taking specific courses and work placements. You will also improve your vocal and instrumental skills further. The specialisation is concluded in the graduation process.

Curious yet? Check out the admission requirements (toelatingseisen) and see whether you're admissible. Here you can also practice some exams for the admission test.

If you have already completed a Bachelor of Music degree, you can take the shortened two-year programme Music in Education Intensive and gain a full teaching qualification for all types of education.
